Dedication

My Dearest Daughter,

You are now a year old, a big, healthy baby, a beautiful life giving your mother and I so much joy and happiness.

You are of English and Japanese parents, you are a mixture of two countries, of two cultures and An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 peoples. This my dear, is an absolute blessing. Japan, your country of birth An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 is An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 a beautiful country full of wonderful An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 food, tradition, and geography. Your grandmother is an amazing woman who worked so hard to give your mother a comfortable life, and opportunities to learn about life, including the opportunity to live abroad in the United States of America, including Hawaii. Your grandfather, though he died at a young age, was able to give your mother a global, outward look on life. He did not, like many Japanese people, close your mother's mind focusing on Japan alone, he showed your mother the excitement and beauty of both Japan and other, foreign countries, especially Italy. Your mother is Japanese, though not like the average Japanese person who, unfortunately, is An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 not taught much about life outside Japan, she is a An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 Japanese woman with power. By power, I mean An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 knowledge. Your mother is powerful because she has learnt many things about her own culture, yours too (Japan), but also about cultures around the world. She did not fear foreign An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 people, like many Japanese people still do today, she welcomed them, and learnt with them. She educated me on what Japan is, that is, the beauty of food, of language and of other Japanese people like herself who admired things beyond their own country.

Your grandmother on my side, is a woman who also worked very hard to make life better for her family. She had a An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 very tough time as a young mother with me and your aunt, working multiple jobs, and going on to raise more children. Your An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 grandfather on my side, my step-father, worked very hard to support a large family, and An Englishman Lost in Japan: 1992-2013 both he and your grandmother were always strict, teaching us right and wrong, and compelling us to live good, moral lives. I was raised to accept all people, of all colour and nationality, without bigotry. However, regardless of how your mother and I were raised, we both as adults made our own choices of how to live our lives. And so will you too be expected to take control of your own life one day, but know this my darling daughter, your mother and I, your family in both Japan and in England are always here for you, to support you, and to guide you in your journey through this wonderful life.
