Special thanks to the book bloggers and readers that were willing to accept an advance copy in exchange for an honest review. I'm so thankful for all your feedback!

Also, a very big thank you to Anya Karin for editing, EroCovers for a beautiful cover, and to anyone that bought Haze, whether you Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) liked it or not. You gave Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) up some of your time to read something that Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) I wrote, and that's awesome one way or another. I cannot thank you enough!

To anyone reading—if you enjoy this book, please don't hesitate to leave a REVIEW so others can enjoy it as well! It would mean so much to me as an independent author. Thank you!

Where the hell am I?

Oh yeah, I knew right where the hell I was. I looked up at my arms—they were tied to the bedpost. I heard familiar laughter spilling in from the nearby room, laughter that reverberated and echoed in my brain.

"God, she's Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) such a fucking slut for doing this."

"Yeah, Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) wait until people see the pictures."

The pictures?

The room was spinning, my head throbbing in sync with it. My body felt sore, used and exhausted. What had gone on here? The low frequency hum in my head continued endlessly; I was certain that my brain had turned to mush.

I knew what had happened, but this was the part where I Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) repressed it.

I unintentionally groaned, which drew their attention back to me. Even though I didn't consciously make Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) the sound, I Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) was still Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) aware that it had happened. Something was tickling my neck.

"Feeling good, sweetie?" The first guy walked into the room, naked, but thankfully I couldn't see below his waist.

"Oh shit, her blindfold fell off," someone else Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) snapped. I recognized all of them—guys from my school, guys from my circle of friends. Jocks. Rich frat guys, guys that had access to daddy's lawyers and money whenever they needed it. One of them ran up and pulled my blindfold back into place, drenching my vision with blackness.

It didn't matter, though; their familiar faces were already permanently etched into my mind. I would remember each and every one, and identify them all for the police after I recovered.

"We're fucked if someone finds out!" I never liked the part when they said that. The words seemed so final, so gritty and dirty. This was always the part when bad mutated into Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) worse.

"How the fuck did it fall off? Is the other one still on?"

"Anybody in there?" I can feel a hand tapping on my head. "Who did you see?"

"I'm sure she didn't see anything. She's fucked up."

The voices came from every direction possible, hammering at my head like a woodpecker on the side of house when you were trying so desperately to get some extra sleep. I hated that they were talking at all. Every Be Here Now (New Adult Contemporary Romance) time one of them got close, my nostrils were overwhelmed by the scent of whiskey.

Fuck this.

"We're fine! She didn't see anything."
