Author's Note

I was born in Arizona over fifty years ago and have lived in the northern wild parts since. I have traveled to and traversed so many mountains, prairies, parks and valleys, canyons, and ridges and I crossed the rivers, swam in and waded through the mud cattle tanks, creeks, and waterholes that sprinkle them in quest of some sight or animal or bird that I can not recall all of the names of them, although I have vivid life-changing remembrances of what happened while doing so.

I have been asked repeatedly to tell these stories so I decided to write them down. These stories are true—the events really happened and were witnessed by others of whom I have fondly tried to protect by changing their names or by referring to them in different terms. This work is lovingly dedicated to Catching Wild:Arizona those who were brave and courageous enough to walk with me throughout this passage of time.

For a Few Feathers

I feel cold lying on the snow huddled Catching Wild:Arizona around an old fence post. I am waiting for sunrise and for feathered jet-like birds to soar overhead. I remember why I am here but am wondering why Catching Wild:Arizona I had to get up so early to wait in the dark and lie in Catching Wild:Arizona the snow for so long. I realize that my anticipation is high and I want to blast the sky with my Winchester semi automatic 12-gauge shotgun. I know that the excitement will warm me up.

Hopefully, I will get one or two today. I mentally coach myself. Hold the gun steady. Lead the bird. Keep both eyes open and shoot before they fly out of Catching Wild:Arizona range.

I can hear them coming now; wings whistling. Do not look! If I look, they will flare and disappear into Catching Wild:Arizona the low Catching Wild:Arizona hanging fog. By the sound of their wings I know it is time. I shoot well and the bird is plummeting out of the sky with folded wings, spinning like that gun-shot fighter plane I saw on the History Channel the other night.

My partner is pleased with me. He says, "That was a great shot. Wait to get it! They are coming around again." We hunker down and wait for the exact moment to stand to take our next shots.

The next two hours seem to vanish into the past almost like they had not occurred. I finally realize that I am shivering and so cold that my fingers have stiffened around the barrel of my gun. That is enough for me. I have to get out of there and fast.

I need to cross the pond again, gather my ducks, and get to the truck. The thought that I was hypothermic crossed my mind. But I tell myself, "You got in here, you'll get out!"
