Foreword

"There is no 'Dead Beats', just a bunch of guys trying to get published."

One year ago the three students that formed the coterie 'Dead Beats' were apathetic towards and Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry disenchanted by the strict canon of their Literature course. However, they were inspired by the writers of the Beat generation and decided to share Beat work and their own pieces with each other. From there the idea came to open this rewarding sense of collaboration to a wider audience. After all, as Charles Bukowski reminds us, "Poetry is what happens when nothing else can."

Since June 2011, they have converged on a weekly basis to discuss each individual submission that they have received. Decisions are predicated on mutual agreement within the group. If ever there are disagreements over submissions (of which Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry there have been a few), this variance is when they most look forward to the reader response.

This collection is an attempt to collate works from just a smattering of their most inspired contributors, and leans towards the Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry writers who first joined them on their venture. The work featured comes from poets the world-over Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry and converges to demonstrate that literature, especially inspiring literature, knows no bounds.

The Beats are dead; long live Dead Beats.

Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry

Olivia Rourke

Rourke has been contributing to Dead Beats since their conception in 2011. Having lived on a rural farm outside of Perth since she can remember, the Australian writer's work is often characterized by a conflict between the rustic and the natural vis-a-vis the artificial and cosmeticized. Moreover, Rourke's texts regularly invoke droll humour, creating an evocative dichotomy between frivolity and sincerity.

Included in this compendium are two poems entitled 'Eagle Bay' and 'Moth's Wings' and one short piece of prose called 'Inexhaustible Pool of Knowledge'.

Moth's Wings

I had the exact measurement required of paper towelling,

Not the broom's whereabouts.

Her eyes were droopy.

I questioned whether it was him Dead Beats One : An Anthology of Contemporary Poetry that needed help,

Or was it her eyes.
