Vampire Kingdom Series

The night air was cool against my skin. The full moon illuminated the city around me. For weeks, I had tracked the Night Crawlers, a group of vampires that were running around slaughtering countless humans. Killing humans was against the Vivificare's Laws. As a member of Vivificare and all which they stood for, it was my duty to put an end to the Night Crawlers.

There were five rogue vampires stalking the streets for humans that were out passed curfew. Jumping down between two buildings, I tossed my hood over my head, punctured a hole in the blood bag in my pocket and made my way to the street. I allowed my feet to drag slightly to be heard and staggered against the wall to make me an easy target. The Night Crawlers would soon smell the blood and come for me.

They moved faster than I expected, but I was still ready nonetheless. They moved with cunning speed and attacked like a pack, which was unlike vampires, because we were solitary creatures.

I flew into the air, flinging my cloak off before my feet touched the ground. They were shocked by my appearance, which brought a smug grin to my face.

“Expecting someone else,” I asked stabbing a Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) stake into the closest one’s chest. He screamed and burst into flames. The Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) other four took a step back from me, “Please, don’t make me chase you,” I said as they took off in a sprint, making me chase them. I hated having to chase them down; it only made me want to torture them Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) that much more. Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1)

The hunt began with me chasing them down the streets. The first three kills came swiftly; the final vampire was Demetrius, a well-known Night Crawler. He was four centuries old and was once a Vivificare. His skills in combatives were superb; he would be a worthy opponent.

“Ah, the Vivificare has sent a female to capture me,” he said displaying his protruding fangs.

“No, they have not,” I whispered.

“Then you do not wish to capture me,” he asked laughing. I shook my head.

“No, I intend to kill you,” I attacked him before he had the chance to attack me. I never waited for my opponent to strike me first, because the first move determined who would prevail from the fight.

Demetrius did not allow my sex or breed to factor in on the way he fought me. He fought me with much strength and speed. He snarled and hissed with each strike. Overpowering me at times, but in the end, it was me who was victorious.

Having staked Demetrius through the heart, while he crouched on top of me, only left a mess for me to clean. Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) I stood up and dusted myself off. The sun would soon be up and Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) the Night Crawlers would be Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) seeking shelter. My night was over for now, but tomorrow, brought another hunt.

I walked back up the street to retrieve my cloak. Another one of my rules was to never leave anything behind. With my cloak on, I headed towards my home. The human curfew would be lifted when the sun reached the horizon and I did my best to avoid them. I was not easy to spot as a vampire, but I did not want to sympathize with their lifestyle. They saw all vampires as bad and did not understand that we also were a democracy.

“Where have you Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) been,” my father asked as I made my way back behind the walls. I rolled my eyes at his question for he already knew the answer.

“Father, must we go through this each time,” I turned and faced him with a grin on my face. He frowned at my expression.

“Your role is to sit next to me during discussions and let our kind see that you support your father,” my father said firmly.

“They know I support you by me fighting the Night Crawlers, who spit on your name,” I hissed.

“You will not leave the castle walls again,” he growled Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) at me. This was a never ending battle between the two Harper (Vampire Kingdom Series Book 1) of us. He believed that females were the lesser of the sexes and needed to stay protected by the males. I did not bother explaining to him that my mother was the one who encouraged me.
