Building a Lean-To

What would you do if you were in a situation where you needed immediate shelter and you How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques needed it with a fairly quick amount of time? Would you know what to do? Could you do it?

The first thing we will talk about in this book is how to build a simple lean-to. These types of shelter have been used for hundreds if not thousands of years and are by far the easiest to construct with the most limited of supplies. A lean-to can be made of most anything you find. How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques If in an urban environment. You can use most any How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques debris from storms that have damaged houses or buildings. Pieces of drift wood, sticks, branches, poles, fences, tarps, garbage bags, and the list goes on and on. Really, the ability to craft one is endless. That said, we will talk about constructing a single person lean-to dwelling. This will be simple to construct because much like it's name, a lean-to, leans. There is very little construction in producing one of these for yourself and this is how you do it.

First, you will want to find an area suitable for the lean-to. The best place in How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques the wilderness would be against a large tree or a large rock or boulder. In the urban environment, you can build one against a building. How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques Near a bridge or under it for that matter. Alongside a vehicle or truck. Pretty much anyplace you can find at least one wall or one area that is solid and will not move.

Next, How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques you will want to find 3-5 suitable poles of some kind. These can be made from any material and about 5-6 feet in length is ideal. Once you have located these items you will set them up against your base structure or the wall in the urban environment. The same goes for those of you in the wilderness. You do the same with the large tree or rock as your base and How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques use the same amounts of branches How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques or young saplings and you will cut them to 5-6 feet in length. Now, in either environment, you will place these poles about eight inches apart so with 6 poles you are covering about 48 inches. You can use more poles if you like but keep each eight inches from the How to Build Survival Shelters - Tips and Techniques others up to any length you see fit. The reason I suggested using only six poles is because you will have a smaller surface area to keep warm if you need to do that. That said, once you have the poles set up you are going to want to keep one end of the lean-to closed. This can be either the right or the left it really does not matter. You can keep it closed off my piling sticks against its end or using a tarp. You can rotate the closure as well if you like really, that is up to you.
