Chapter 1

Just to make sure that those of you who tend to skip forewords and introductions don't miss some vitals of this book I feel compelled to insert a brief introduction here in the first chapter.

Integration of the Mind

What started as a vague idea this Integration of the Mind morning is blossoming into a huge revelation for me. It started with the word “integration.” You can already tell that I’m not talking about racial integration, although I’m seeing the parallels to that application of the term and the reasons that for some people, let’s say it plainly, because in the U.S. that’s what it boils down to – black vs. white – rather than black and white ...racial integration has not worked towards its ultimate purpose of not judging one another and, in fact the freedom to love one another without regard to the outward appearance of another person.

Many members of both sides of that equation have unbridled, Integration of the Mind unthinking hostility toward anyone who isn’t of the same color as they.

Before Integration of the Mind I digress into one of my true stories, I was awakened by a vivid dream at 4:15 this a.m. ...a man was saying: “What is the point of making a decision if I have a program running subconsciously that makes –what I don’t want to do– come back Integration of the Mind to haunt me?”

Let’s put those words into the lament that is common to the human animal: “Why am I always doing the things I don’t want to do and not doing the things I know I should be doing?”

Ryan and I of late have been delving into the currently popular phrase of “self-sabotage” related to our own up and down experiences related to finances. We both have had experiences of relative success in business and experiences of losing it all in a variety of ways, both separately and together.

Integration of the Mind

We both have learned and accepted the view that in order to change our present and future as it relates to finance, we have to take total responsibility for what has occurred to us in the past. Another way of saying it is that somehow, on a subconscious level, we have attracted everything that has ever occurred to us, both “good” and “bad.”

What this website, Spiritual Healing Source.com is all about is exactly that. Ryan and I have both received physical healing on a massive scale – he of Crohn’s Disease and I a brand new heart. He was told by doctors that he probably wouldn’t live past fifty, if he got that far.

I was told, by a heart specialist on the occasion of a physical examination for life insurance for business purposes, and for which I would probably never qualify because of the relatively large amount on the application.

Ryan is past fifty and now in excellent health; I like to say I am going on ninety and my health is likewise excellent. Someone might point to the fact that I often jog between 5 and 10 miles as evidence that this body bag I Integration of the Mind occupy is going strong ...especially for my age, right?

A few days ago I was asked how many prescriptions I had to take on a daily basis, when I answered none, the person said, “Wow, that’s rare at your age, I don’t know anybody over sixty that doesn’t take something their doctor has prescribed!”

Integration of the Mind

Another secret is revealed, I don’t even have a doctor. Because I’m legally required to be on Medicare, a story for another time, my beloved kept nagging that I get what is called a Medicare supplemental health Integration of the Mind insurance policy, “just in case.”

When I discovered I could get one that cost me zero, that’s right, nada, through what Integration of the Mind is called premium return, I gave up resisting; I pay nothing. It even comes with a free membership at a gym ...where the conversation about prescription drugs took place in the locker room after my workout.

Oh yeah, back to not having a doctor to call my own ...with the supplemental insurance policy, I am required to have a “primary care” physician – so I told the agent to pick one of the ones that were approved in the book ...I don’t even remember his (or her) name.

Where is this all leading? Well, it is obvious to me where the above referenced dream came from. Ryan and I have been involved in business together going back seventeen years with successful times and the not so successful times.

Recently we have been looking into the possible mental/emotional reasons our successes have not been sustained.

Integration of the Mind

The discoveries have been massive! This is the introduction to what we’re learning and we’re to share ...I’ll do the writing and he’ll Integration of the Mind handle the technical aspects of putting it up on the website and recording our phone conversations that often boil down to what he understood and agreed with what is written or what he didn’t understand or wanted to offer a different point of view ...and put it into what he calls a podcast and later convert it all into a book.

The true story I was going to tell won’t be for this time around, we’ll get to it in a later segment. What I am going to say, by way of introduction, is I would be amused if it weren’t so tragic that a lot of people who resist one aspect of what Ryan and I have shared in the Integration of the Mind past about emotional and physical healing Integration of the Mind walk Integration of the Mind away without receiving a healing that they say they want and the cause is obvious, to us, that it is the one thing that they resist that is causing it.

I’m being shown, this moment, that regardless of whether what we have shared about this one aspect is true for them, is immaterial ...integration of the mind will overcome it. That is the purpose of this book.

An important part of what is coming up is the spin I put on a term that Ryan coined the other day and that is overtaking us by storm – “extraordinary abundance” we’re being shown not only how to receive it, but how it will be sustained and that AUTOMATICALLY!

More to come . . .

Integration of the Mind

Chapter 2

My pet Sewer-rat, what shall I name her?

Okay, okay, “him,” if you prefer ...why Integration of the Mind do we always attach “him” to any Integration of the Mind pest? Do we forget that a black widow (referring here to the spider variety) is always a female? Why does an ant or mosquito have to have the male “him” attached to it ...you know, after successfully swatting it or putting your thumb on it, exclaiming “I got him?”

It was difficult for me to change my habit, after dispatching a mosquito, from saying “I got him” ...to “it.” I admit it; the way I changed was to say, “I got her” and finally graduated to the nongender specific “it.”

Now that I’ve got that important bit of information out of the way, let’s get to the point of the subtitle of this chapter.

Would you purchase or even accept as a gift, a sewerrat for a pet? I’m assuming that the answer is, most likely not ...unless, that is, if you were really desperate for company.

Continuing on with that thought, you most likely wouldn’t name it “Spot,” “Squiggles” or some other ridiculous pet name either, correct? Putting a label on the thing makes you the proud owner.

The first time I saw a person totally freed up from the diagnosis of an “irreversible condition” was when it popped into my mind, after silently asking what to do, was to tell him that the day he stopped calling it “my _____” it would stop being his and he could let it go.

Integration of the Mind

I still remember vividly, with a great deal of satisfaction, the shocked look of realization on his face. He immediately became aware that he didn’t need to be healed – he simply had to quit calling it “my diabetes.”

Another incident just came to my consciousness: a young lady who had been diagnosed with “social phobia.”

As soon as she declared it no longer belonged to her ...poof! Her proud ownership statement of “my social phobia” ended and so did the “condition” and the endless “therapy” which was getting her nowhere.

Does that mean that sometimes the condition isn't real or therapy a valid way to deal with it?

Nope, I'm not saying that, until I ask the question and get the individualspecific answer.

While I resist making anything into a system or a rule ...simply because what works for one person will not always work for another; every now and then I've seen the same result when I asked what to do after my initial question which is often, why are we here? ...and I was “instructed” to tell the person to stop claiming ownership and just let it go.

Get it?

As important as exercise, may be for each individual, to gain optimal mental, physical and spiritual health, AGAIN, exercise for each individual, may be the appropriate precursor or, at the very least, a necessary corrective to optimal health.

Integration of the Mind

Publisher Ryan Bruce, who is one of the most mentally disciplined people with whom I am personally acquainted, had to stop and ask the reason the body bag he occupies was often getting injured from his exercise.

The reason is personal to him and not worth getting into for you ...because, and, again, it was individually specific, the point is he Integration of the Mind received the answer and no longer goes through periods of having to stop exercising because he was doing more harm than good.

Point being is that he needed to adjust his mental discipline into the habit of asking questions rather than living by rules that he assumed to be true.

Ask for the appropriate question and you'll always get the appropriate answer, but start the process with asking for or DEMANDING to be given the appropriate question.

This is the reason that I so often say, I don't know squat. I don't assume I know anything from a conclusive point of view. In that way I can get the appropriate question and answer ...get it? What now? ...oh, I'm supposed to stop for now, hope this has been useful for YOU.

Next up, in Chapter 3, we'll deal with Assumed Truth, which isn't true ...and, from my point of view, a vital tool for our mind integration tool kit.

Integration of the Mind

Chapter 3

An Assumed Truth Which Isn't True

I was in the middle of writing this – in a whole different vein than the direction I'm getting now. What happened is that about Integration of the Mind an hour ago I heard the little signal indicating a new message in my inbox.

It got my attention because of the similarity to some of the things I had been writing – so I asked if I was supposed to pay any attention to it and was rather impatient to get back to writing.

Before we jump into this with both feet, it seems important to me to plant this reminder about why the Integration of the Mind mind needs to be integrated to make strides to access spiritual healing for ourselves and to access healing power on behalf of others: The conscious or cognitive, that is, the thinking part of the mind is Integration of the Mind where we figure things out ...draw conclusions, make judgments about what is going on around us on this physical or, if you prefer, material plane.

In the subconscious is where all our presuppositions, prejudices and other unthinking stuff which rules us far more than we want to think resides.

Integration of the Mind

Sigmund Freud came up with a third part of the mind which he called the superconscious ...an interesting point of view, but one about which all sorts of religious argument takes place ...I take the view that the superconscious is the place in our minds where we connect with ...call it what you will, SOURCE, GOD, I AM, SPIRIT, SPIRIT PARENT, HOLY SPIRIT, UNIVERSE, HIGHER INTELLIGENCE or any other of Integration of the Mind Integration of the Mind the myriad terms and names that have been used throughout history ...and now about this Supreme Entity by whatever other title or name.

Just to put a bit of amusement to the argument, about which is the best term, I came up with the acronym BWOTON. If you begin to put in a bit of effort you'll see that you will be able to pronounce it ...a miracle! That proves it is the proper name for whatever it is that is so important about it that we think ours is the better one. BWOTON is just an acronym for: By Whatever Other Title Or Name and, therefore, it encompasses your favorite and with which I was sure I was putting an end to all argument.

With regard to the super-conscious, there are those who insist that it is BWOTON within ...the one we made up; many believe that is what Freud was thinking, if not saying.

I see no need or practical use to argue about what Freud may or may have not been thinking. He also thought that sometimes a cigar is only a cigar (rather than a phallic symbol).

Integration of the Mind

Back to the point of digression ...I knew I was supposed to put aside my writing and watch the referenced video, which I had been Integration of the Mind about to delete because I knew it was going to be a sales pitch.
