Chapter 1

Package Deal

Saturday 1st

Sun, sun, sun. Dazzling, beaming, glorious sun. It engulfed the craggy mountains, tickled the cliff tops and skimmed over the beaches. It swept over tranquil green fields and gently swaying woods. It glinted off the sea and bounced off white-washed garden walls, casting pregnant shadows from the rotund terra cotta vases on every doorstep. Not a cloud in the sky. Not even a wisp of grey or a smudge of white. Just blue, blue, heavenly, everlasting blue.

Vibrant bursts of magenta bougainvillea punctuated the gleaming whiteness of the houses that dotted the hillside. Skinny cats lay asleep beneath olive trees and tables, not so much as twitching an ear as the coach heaved itself past Package Deal on its way to Skala, squeezing between the houses that flanked the narrow winding road. Locals looked up and squinted. Some nodded. Some waved. An old man Package Deal riding on a donkey gave a toothless grin and saluted them as they chugged past.

Mia shrunk back in her seat. The Brits were invading. How did these people stand it – and with such good grace? And yet just like everyone else on board the coach, she too yearned for the soothing warmth, uplifting colours and sensual textures of a Greek island. Two Package Deal weeks of real summer to Package Deal compensate for the Package Deal stop-start misnomer of a summer that taunted Great Britain every year. Not that that was the only reason she had come here alone rather than follow her friends to Edinburgh for the festival – but it was reason enough.

“Hang Package Deal on, did you just say that Tom Hanks lives 'ere? Bloody 'ell, Caz! We come to the right place, ain't we? Hollywood stars an' all that!”

“What?”

“The place where 'e bought his house.”

“Dunno. 'ERE! Scuse me, Package Deal love – whatcha say that place was called where Tom Hanks bought a villa?”

“Fiskardo, in the north of the island,” the plump, young rep purred into the microphone in a gentle Irish accent, her frizzy ginger hair bouncing as the coach bumped over potholes in the road.

“That's it, Fistardo.”

“Fistarvo?”

“Fistardo. Just remember fist and 'ard. Shouldn't be a problem for you, eh Caz?” The two women snorted with laughter.

Mia rolled her eyes. Could those two possibly talk any louder? She'd suffered them all the way from Gatwick – from the perfume section of the duty-free (“‘Ere Caz, smell this Obsession! Bloody gorgeous, innit?”), the ladies loos (“Oh Package Deal would you Adam-and-Eve it? I got me bleedin' period, Babs! Sod's bleedin' law!”), the departure lounge (“Why are we waiting? We are suffocating!”), and Package Deal then of course they'd sat across the aisle from her on the plane (“Ere we go, 'ere we go, 'ere we go!”). She prayed they wouldn't be dropped off at the same apartments.

“OK! Those of you with Hotel Sea Breeze on your envelopes, this is your stop,” the rep Package Deal smiled down the aisle as the coach pulled over and the passengers reached Package Deal for their hand luggage.

Mia tucked her wavy honey-coloured hair behind her ears and looked at her envelope. She was staying at Eleni Apartments. She prayed the birds-of-a-feather would get off.

“Babs, that ain't us is it?”

“What's the envelope say?”

“I can’t pronounce it, but it ain’t Sea Package Deal Breeze.”

Mia sighed.
