Chapter 1: The Usual Things

When the Faithful gather, it's usually for song, but the six angels in the Pomeroy's hayloft stood silent. Boots scuffed the straw-littered floor. Fingers tapped a restless rhythm. Expressions were easy to read. Confusion marked both apprentice Guardians. Their mentors were concerned, and their respective captains were at a loss how to comfort them.

Jedrick tried first. "This is not the first time Miss Pomeroy has been at the center of mysterious ways."

Tamaes's flame-hued wings trembled with emotions his voice didn't betray. "While that is true, this is unusual in the extreme. Prissie is my charge."

Taweel grunted. "Show Jedrick."

Obeying his mentor, Tamaes extended a large, sun-browned hand. Letters etched their way Pursuing Prissie across his palm in heaven's language, spelling out a name—Hezekiah Pomeroy.

"Her brother," Jedrick mused aloud, his Pursuing Prissie gaze switching to a Guardian with pearlescent pink wings. "Your charge."

"Zeke," confirmed Ethan. Although the bristle-haired angel was clearly the youngest of their gathering, he seemed to be taking this new Sending in Pursuing Prissie stride. With an apologetic air, he offered his palm. Proof of his altered status showed against fair skin—Priscilla Pomeroy.

"An interesting trade-off," remarked Conrad, who mentored Ethan. "Any idea why two Guardians would be asked to switch places?"

Tycho, the Pursuing Prissie tall archer who captained the Flight to which Conrad and Ethan belonged, asked, "Have either of these children done anything unusual?"

Taweel snorted. Pursuing Prissie

"Lately?" Tycho amended.

Tamaes rubbed at the letters on his hand. "Prissie's days have Pursuing Prissie been quiet. She stays busy." In a gentler tone, he added, "She misses us."

Ethan shrugged. "Unless football practice and profiteroles are newly added to the perils we guard against, Zeke's days are Pursuing Prissie also quiet. For him."
