Opening her eyes, she felt a presence and turned over quickly. She was sure she'd catch a glimpse of something over her shoulder near the chest of drawers. She sensed it more than saw it. In a split second it was gone and she was sitting up in bed blinking, wondering why she was staring in a Scarlett corner. Confused, she pushed back Scarlett the covers and got out of bed stretching and yawning.

Odd, how sometimes after a full night of sleep her body felt tired like she'd spent an afternoon working out in a gym. Or how she assumed going to the gym felt.

Looking in the mirror on the dresser, she pulled her night shirt over her head. Her hair was a bushy mess, Scarlett the twin braids had come down in her sleep.

After dressing in a faded denim skirt and tee shirt, she set about tidying up the bedroom. James' clothes and other stuff were all over the place. She kicked his play station under the bed, not caring if it could take it or not. Why they even shared a bedroom anymore was ridiculous, except that James refused to occupy a separate sleeping area.

Holding her breath, she pulled back the sheets, hoping for something different, but James was the original creature of habit. Bloody smears were all over his side of the bed. Every full moon she had hot erotic dreams, and he sneaked out and came home a bloody Scarlett mess.

Out of nowhere, she sensed she was being watched. She spun around swiftly. Nothing.

"Damn girl," she chided herself, carrying the bundle of bed clothes down the hall Scarlett to the laundry closet. "What you expect to see, a ghost?" Dropping the load, she felt Scarlett unease creep up her spine. Slowly, she traveled back inside the bedroom. "Oh Scarlett," she Scarlett said out loud. "What's with Scarlett you this morning?"
