“Mommy, mommy, time to wake up! Can The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain I go take the cloth off the birdcage now? Please wake up mommy!”

“It’s kind of early dear, are you sure you want to do that right now?” her mother asks while stretching in bed.

“Yes that’s what I want to do or I wouldn’t be asking now wake up mommy!”

“Twila, you go ahead without me, I’ll be up in a second.”

“Okay mommy,” Twila excitedly runs out of the bedroom and down the narrow hallway. She enters the large living room and The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain with the use of her socks, slides across the wooden floor and stops right in front of the birdcage. “Rise and shine beautiful birdies!” she says after removing the cloth cover.

“Darla, Darla, she’s here again and she has that look in her eyes. I’m sure she’s here to eat us this time, she’s going to eat us for sure!” Mickey shouts while flying around the The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain cage.

Darla yawns and opens her eyes. “Calm down bro Twila loves us. It’s been almost a month since we’ve been here and besides you say that every morning.”

Mickey lands next to his sister on the tree branch. “You think I’m crazy don’t you?”

“No, I think you’re a Loon,” Darla answers and continues with her morning song.

“Well excuse me for worrying about our well-being.”

“You worry too much, try to relax and enjoy life sometimes.”

“You can’t always be so carefree The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain Darla, with that line of thinking all the time you won’t live long.”

“Worrying about every little thing neither will you.”

Both birds stare each other down for a while before turning their beaks up and looking away. Darla then hops down The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain to the water tube to take a drink; Mickey goes in the opposite corner and munches on the birdseeds.

Twila snickers at their behavior. “You two birdies do that every morning, The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain its funny. I wonder what you guys are thinking?” she starts chirping back at them.

Darla looks up at her and giggles. “That is so cute, don’t you think so bro?”

Mickey stares The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain at the child as if she has lost her mind. “Sure, cute, whatever you say sis.”

“Oh don’t be such a stick-in-the-mud. Maybe if you act friendly to them they’ll let us spread our wings and fly around the room from time to time.”

“Let us fly around? Humph! Don’t get your feathers up about that The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain one, or The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain your first idea for that matter.”

Twila tells them she will be right back and sprints to her mother’s room.

“Seriously you Dodo, yesterday I heard Twila begging her parents to let us out of the cage someday,” she tells while flying to the highest branch.

“And, what did they say?”

“They said maybe someday, but not today.”

“See I told you so. It might not be such a bad idea to stay in the cage after all. There are way too many dangers out there just waiting for us to fly into their clutches.”

Darla glides back down and lands in front of him. “Oh yeah, sooo many dangers in the living room like hot lamps and spinning ceiling fans—oh, not to mention the creepy The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain cold leather furniture that’s just dying to get a hold of us.”

He starts shaking like a leaf The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain in the wind.

She sighs. “Really Mickey, what The Adventures of Darla and Mickey: The Bird Fountain real danger could possibly be in the house?”

“Does he fit the bill?” he says with fear.

Darla turns around only to see the huge, mischievous eyes of a calico cat staring her down with bad intentions. She yells to the top of her beak
