THE RANCH

You sleep on stacked mattresses and mice run the floor, biting at toes; you wake, set traps and stack the mattresses higher still.

This is old Sask summer: flax and mustard paint the horizon the bright yellow colour of sun you find in children's pictures, and always the sky is just another dead prairie above you.

Everything you remember lives inside the chicken-farm homestead with its back-broken frame and that reek of old water sitting still. At night the house breathes with open windows, swells at the seams.

At sunrise, it exhales a dust so fine you think of bull hearts, dried and ground.

When it's gutted of furniture, you find imprints in the carpet: four beds, two dressers, a shelf.

and from those years when no one kept it, from The Lease before the oil and the oilmen came, the mark where the deer walked in, lay down and died.

FENCELESS

There are no signposts, no old men waiting to tell you here. This place repeats itself; everywhere you've been is folded into grass and dirt, and you blame chance, not science, for putting the iron here, like no seismic charts were read, no holes drilled, as if wealthy men and god The Lease just wanted you sweating The Lease in the mud.
But the cows, they can find borders even under daylight's sterile sun, watch nations grow from boot prints, divide the plain by men and else. They graze away, uncountable, unheard as you walk the field, tool to tool, with no sense of what is yours, and what is not.

THE TANK

Squats three days at a time in white-brown mud that sticks and sucks, like a mouth, against
