The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2)

The Vampire's Secret Family

Eight Years too Late

Prologue

“You’ll get use to it,” Jaline moved toward the kitchen and looked to see how dusty the gun she had taken out of the drawer was. Ava was now twenty years old and had come to her for training to kill them. “From now on, you will be responsible for hunting your own food, and adjust to living at night. Vampires sneak through the night so you will live at The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) night as well. The only time you will be in daylight is to move, because they cannot follow you.”

“I understand,” Ava said walking into the kitchen and setting her bag on a chair. “I am here to follow all your instructions and learn all I can from you as fast as I can.”

“It won’t be quick enough,” Jaline said looking toward Ava. “I trained for five years with Marcus as an apprentice. A normal apprenticeship for vampires is a hundred years. We don’t have that time so I will push harder than anyone has ever pushed you before. You have to go beyond any human strength or speed to kill a vampire.”

Jaline walked to a drawer, where she The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) knew Marcus had kept a gun for Grace when she was here. It was just in case someone attacked and he went down. Setting the gun down on the counter she reached for the bullets and sat them down as well. The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) Opening the small wooden box she checked the bullets to make sure they were silver. It probably wasn’t a good idea to give a vampire hating human a way to immobilize her, but she trusted Ava.

“What will I do with a gun,” she asked standing next to the sink by Jaline. Ava was staring at it like it was evil. She will have to get rid of that fear of guns.

“Vampires are quicker and stronger than you will ever be. Your only defense against them is to catch them by surprise and shoot them.”

“I thought that wouldn’t kill them,” Ava asked as she picked the gun up and brushed the dust off of it.

“It won’t,” Jaline said her eyes stern as she stared at Ava. “It’ll knock them out if The Vampire’s Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) the bullets are silver, we’re allergic to silver. It gives you enough time to find their amulet and destroy it. It is the only way to destroy a vampire.”

“What if I can’t find their amulet,” Jaline bit her lip as she looked at Ava’s small frame and childlike face. It was hard for her not to see the little girl that once drew a picture of a dog for her.

“You run,” Jaline stated firmly.

Chapter 1

“Keep your elbow down,” Jaline grabbed Ava’s arm forcefully pulling it down and checking it for stiffness. “Tighten your arm.” Ava stood with bow in hand aimed at the target of a dummy. “Take a deep breath, hold it The Vampire’s Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) and release,” Ava did as commanded and the The Vampire’s Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) arrow hit the dummy in the chest.

“Yes,” Ava said and jumped a little. Jaline didn’t look as pleased and walked away from Ava. For two years, Ava has been training with almost every weapon known to man and it still wasn’t good enough for Jaline. She mastered at hunting, and maneuvering. Her use of a gun had improved greatly and she was pretty good with a Katana as well. None of it meant anything to Jaline, she still pushed her to be faster and shoot more accurate. “What did I do wrong this time?”

Ava walked along with Jaline as she went to the house. “You are not fast enough. If I have to explain to you how to shoot, you are not moving fast enough. By the time, you get ready to shoot, you’d be dead.”

“I am trying,” Ava threw the bow down on the ground and wanted to scream. Nothing was good enough, nothing she did was correct. She had to be faster, stronger. Yet every time she fought with Jaline she won.

Ava started to walk away toward the forest to cool down when she saw Jaline go stiff as a board. Something changed in the air around them and Ava looked around the forest for a clue to what was happening. With a loud hiss, Ava watched Jaline crouch down like a cat and her claws extended from her nails. Sharp fangs got sharper before her eyes and a louder hiss escaped her mentor’s mouth as she stared at the woods across from them.

Someone was there, she realized as she reached behind her where she had put her gun. Jaline instantly held up a hand telling her to stay where she was. Ava backed up toward the house and held her gun down to the ground as she waited for her first vampire attack. This was not the way she thought it would be, but it would have to do for now. Tightening The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) her The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) hair in the long pony tail she watched Jaline’s cat like position.

In the corner of her eye she saw a figure appear in their cat like posture in response to Jaline’s alertness. Ava thought it was a male, but it The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) was hard to tell at the distance he was to The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) thin. Jaline didn’t back The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) off from her stance as she slowly crept forward toward the other vampire. Then the two moved quicker toward each other until they met in the middle of the small field and Ava could hear two loud growls as the two stared at each other. Ava held her The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) gun softly as her heart raised in response and fear crept through her. She wasn’t ready for this.

Jaline stared at the other vampire. His light brown eyes almost stuck out of his skull as the two stood off with one another. His claws dug into the ground to keep himself from attacking and his fangs were barely sharp enough to cut through a cows hide. What the hell was a young vampire like him The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) doing in Marcus’ territory?

Exposing her teeth toward him in a loud hiss of warning, the male backed off slightly and let his claws and fangs disappear in respect. Jaline was much older and stronger than this male. He was barely ten years a vampire, if that. She had him in The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) the bag if he attacked her. It wouldn’t have been the first time a male tried to attack her thinking The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) her gender made a difference to her strength.

“What are you doing here?” A soft hiss of her voice came out as she refused to back down. He was a blood drinker and Ava was close by. Jaline was not going to risk her life on a The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) stupid vampire like him.

“I came looking for you,” he said in a low growl of a voice and smile picked at the corner of his mouth. “I heard you were taking on apprentices,” looking behind her he stared at Ava. She knew what he would see, blood with a gun. “I didn’t The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) realize you The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) were taking in humans.”

In a warning she hissed at him loudly. Jaline picked up her claws and readied an attack if he took one step closer to Ava. Ava was like a niece/daughter to her and she would not allow any vampire to lay a finger on her. This was her job, this was her life and she would die before this kid touched Ava.

In response the vampire crouched down and The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) readied an attack. “I warn you, if you come near her I will kill you.” Something sparked in his eyes and he backed off slightly. He moved like a lion and fluently bowed his head in respect.

“I meant no disrespect,” his eyes met hers again she saw cockiness in his eyes. A trick, she thought quickly as she prepared herself to attack.

In a slight movement of his weight, Jaline knew he was going to attack her. The male came at The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) her from the side and Jaline quickly jumped up and landed between him and Ava. The movements were quick as he came at her again and she slashed his chest with her claws and rounded behind him to put her knee in his back pushing him on the ground. She growled as she held his throat in her hands. This bastard just tried to hurt her.

“Alright,” he said and Jaline turned him over. A single claw pressed against the hollow of his throat and she waited for him to make his move. “I’m a friend,” he said The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) as he placed his hand against Jaline’s leg. She hissed and pressed her claw deeper into his throat cutting him slightly. He let her go and pressed his hands back on the dirt.

“I don’t have any friends,” she let out smoothly as she narrowed The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) her eyes at him. Searching his eyes for any sign to what was going on she found nothing. “Who sent you, was it William, or...” she looked up at Ava The Vampire's Human Apprentice (Council Book 2) and stopped talking. The girl still held the gun in one hand but mostly she just stood there looking through the woods just in case he wasn’t alone. Jaline was proud of that.

“I wouldn’t help William get a hold of you if he tortured me,” a growl escaped his mouth at the insinuation. “If I wanted William to beat you again, I wouldn’t have helped you escape.”

Jaline didn’t flinch; she stared at him up and down for a moment. No one helped her escape. William was out on business she got out when everyone was sleeping during the day. As far as she knew, no one saw her. The vampires were knocked out safe in their holes as the humans watched over them. Jaline almost flinched at the thought. The humans that protected the vampires while they slept were waiting for their turn to become vampires.
