Tokyo Yakuza #12:

By Josh Vogt

January 25, 2020. "I don't understand, Gorou. Why we killing him again? Get our money back?"

Gorou sighed as he led Isamu down the piss-stinking warren of back alleys. They shuffled past whimpering beggars, ancestral upload temples, moldering food carts, and trinket hovels. Eyes watched them from all angles, peering down from the shabby apartments above, peeking around corners, faces pressed against grimy windows. Their watchers no doubt carried an endless array of contraband and weapons, always eager to leave a stripped body dumped in the gutters for a rare cop patrol to find.

Fortunately, his companion's muscled body rippled with vibrant yakuza tattoos, marking him as a local enforcer. Those who might've taken advantage of Gorou's slight frame quickly faded into the night once they spotted Isamu stalking beside him.

"It's not just the money," Gorou said. "We were cheated. If we'd Tokyo Yakuza #12: Blood in the Headwaters lost fairly, I might be inclined to let him live and just salvage my wounded pride."

"But ..." Isamu scratched his bald head. "You cheat. You hide our money."

"That's different." Gorou fiddled with the chain of antique copper yen around his Tokyo Yakuza #12: Blood in the Headwaters neck. "I use my natural intelligence to keep family funds from being detected by pokers and priers. I dig invisible data caches and craft coded treasure chests to secure our financial future. That's cleverness, not cheating. But this Susanoo asshole, he fleeced us with the help of a few neural enhancements."
